About Vienna Instruments

Before we really start, we would like to give you a bit of information about our Vienna Instruments software, which was created by our grand programming team. The main object was to get a tool which could handle not only all the articulations, but also our special Interval and Repetition Performances without the user having to take care about delay compensation, octave offset, and such things. Moreover, you should be able to use one MIDI track per instrument – after all, a violinist doesn't have to switch to another fiddle to play legato, either.

The first problem was solved by implementing performance detection algorithms on the Patch level. It doesn't matter now whether you're using single notes with or without alternating capabilities, legatos, or repetitions; it's load and play. Vienna Instruments takes care of numbers and calculations because the Patches communicate their requirements or "rules" to the player.

Patches are fine, but how to combine them? The decision was in favor of a Matrix approach. A Matrix is a two-dimensional (in this case) array of cells in which Patches can be stored. Every Patch in the Matrix has its distinct position defined by its horizontal and vertical Cell count, so that each Patch/Cell can be called up by a combination of two controllers. You can build up and streamline your own Matrices to fit your needs.

But there still was one more step to go, because in spite of its ability to command up to 144 Patches, a Matrix only has those two controllers – and one might need different controllers for special tasks. For example, our new speed control algorithm is good for switching between different repetition articulations but doesn't make much sense when you simply want to change from vibrato to a non-vibrato articulation … So the third, and highest level of instrument integration is the Preset, where you can combine Matrices and activate them via keyswitches. A Preset can hold 12 Matrices. That alone would make 1728 articulations available to a single MIDI track – if there weren't some other goodies you'll learn about presently. Anyway, we're confident that this leaves us sufficient headroom to go on for a while.

Vienna Ensemble PRO, Vienna Instruments PRO

Vienna Ensemble PRO incorporates the first all-in-one MIDI and audio LAN solution that works universally on Macs and PCs. All you need to integrate a slave computer over LAN is a working Gigabit connection, no soundcard or MIDI Interface is needed on your Vienna Ensemble Slave Computer!

Vienna Instruments PRO opens up new dimensions for the art of virtual orchestration! With innovations like Humanize, Enveloped Time Stretching and our APP Sequencer you are entering a new level of virtual rality, with all the little details that make music what it is.

And we have even more in store for you
